Trick Title Event Held

Monday October 22, was the night to show your tricks to our AKC evaluator, Mary Ash.

Some of the teams worked on their tricks on Monday evenings with the help of Donna Golemon.

There were five members and two non-members who attended this event to make a total of nine teams. And every team earned either a novice or an intermediate AKC Trick Title!

All the new title holders are pictured.

"I really enjoyed working with the dogs and teams for their trick titles. It was fun to watch the progress of the dogs and handlers. After each session, I came home with a smile on my face because it was a rewarding training time by all."

"A thank you to Mary for evaluating and to the group I worked with, a thank you for allowing me to help in your journey. Till our next training adventure!"

Is Neosporin Safe for Dogs?

Just like their owners, dogs are susceptible to minor injuries and are not immune to getting cuts, scrapes, or burns. But can you use Neosporin® on dogs? The answer isn't completely straightforward. In some instances, applying the topical, antibiotic ointment can help heal your dog's wound, but there are situations when it is not advisable or necessary to use it on your canine companion.

Since most people immediately reach for some type of ointment when an incident occurs, it's not unusual that your first instinct might be to do the same for your dog. But before you go ahead and start applying Neosporin, there are a few things to take into consideration.

With abrasions (scrapes and scratches), you should first clean and flush the wound with soap and water, then rinse thoroughly and pat dry. Your veterinarian should see all puncture or penetrating wounds, including dog bites, as soon as possible.

Neosporin is comprised of three different antibiotics: bacitracin, neomycin, and polymyxin

B. Together, they work to kill bacteria on the skin and prevent topical infection. Dr. Rachel Barrack, a licensed veterinarian, certified in both veterinary acupuncture and Chinese herbology with Animal Acupuncture in New York City, points out that Neosporin has been formulated for people and is not necessarily safe for use on dogs.

"Bacitracin has been deemed safe for use on animals, as has polymyxin B. However, neomycin has been linked to loss of hearing," she says. "This was primarily shown with intravenous use, but it is recommended that you do not administer neomycin topically to your dog without first consulting your vet."

Because Neosporin is topical and applied directly onto the skin, there's always a chance that your dog could have an allergic reaction. It's a good idea to administer a small patch test first. The best way to do this is by picking a small area of skin and applying a tiny dab of Neosporin, then monitor the area to see if your dog develops a mild rash, redness, or hives.

"Typically, small amounts of Neosporin are not harmful," says Dr. Danel Grimmett, a veterinarian with Sunset Veterinary Clinic in Oklahoma. By performing a patch test in advance, you'll know for certain whether your dog can tolerate this antibacterial cream before he really needs it.

The advantage of using Neosporin is that it kills off any live, existing bacteria, and stops them from growing. When applied to the skin, it helps to create a physical barrier against bacteria to prevent them from entering the wound and offers protection against infection. But there are some instances in which applying it to your dog might do more harm than good.

If your dog's wound is located in a spot that's easily reachable, he might try licking the Neosporin off, which not only defeats the purpose but also might make your pup sick.

"The main concern regarding ingestion of Neosporin is the potential impact to the GI flora (normal gut bacteria), resulting in GI upset such as vomiting and diarrhea," explains Dr. Grimmett. "A second potential cause of GI upset would be the lubricant base, which could also give them diarrhea, etc."

You can try covering the area with a sterile dressing, but Dr. Grimmett points out that not all dogs tolerate bandaging, and the same desire to lick something off their skin will most likely prompt them to chew, as well. "A bandage can act as a tourniquet, reducing adequate blood flow to extremities, if not managed well," he says. "Great care must be taken to prevent any constriction."

Other instances when Neosporin would not be beneficial to your dog are if he is bleeding heavily, the wound is deep, or appears to be severe. In these circumstances, it's important to call your veterinarian or nearest animal hospital immediately for assistance.

While using Neosporin to treat a minor injury to your dog may be fine at times, there are several products that are designed specifically for canines and completely safe, even if ingested.

Whatever type of injury your dog sustains, it's important to first talk with your veterinarian before administering any new medications, especially if they're made for humans. "Your veterinarian is better equipped to treat your dog's potential infections than you are at home," says Dr. Barrack.

A Disease Called Trust

There is a deadly disease stalking your dog, a hideous, stealthy thing just waiting its chance to steal your beloved friend. It is not a new disease, or one for which there is an inoculation. The disease is called "Trust."

You knew before you ever took your puppy home that it could not be trusted. The breeder who provided you with this precious animal warned you, drummed it into your head. Puppies steal off counters, destroy anything expensive, chase cats, take forever to house train, and must never be allowed off lead!!!

When the big day finally arrived, heeding the sage advice of the breeder, you escorted your puppy to his new home, properly collared and tagged, the lead held tightly in your hand.

At home, the house was "puppy proofed." Everything of value was stored in the spare bedroom, garbage stored on top of the refrigerator. Cats separated, and a gate placed across the living room to keep at least one part of the house "pudle free." All the windows and doors had been properly secured, and signs placed in all strategic points reminding all to "Close the door!"

Soon it becomes second nature to make sure the door closes nine tenths of a second after it was opened and that it is really latched. "Don't let the dog out" is your second most verbalized expression. (The first is "NO!") You worry and fuss constantly, terrified that your darling will get out and Disaster will surely follow. Your friends comment about who you love most, your family or the dog. You know that to relax your vigil for a moment might lose Him to you forever.

And so the weeks and months pass, with your puppy becoming more civilized every day, and the seeds of trust are planted. It seems that each new day brings less destruction, less breakage. Almost before you know it, your gangly, slurpy puppy has turned into an elegant, dignified friend.

Now that he is a more reliable, sedate companion, you take him more places. No longer does he chew the steering wheel when left in the car. And darn it if that cake wasn't still on the counter this morning. And, oh yes, wasn't that the cat he was sleeping with so cozily on your pillow last night?

At this point you are beginning to become infected, the disease is spreading its roots deep into your mind. And then one of your friends suggests obedience classes and after a time, you even let him run loose from the car into the house when you get home. Why not, he always runs straight to the door, dancing a frenzy of joy and waits to be let in. And, remember he comes every time he is called. You know he is the exception that disproves the rule. (And sometimes late at night, you even let him slip out the front door to go potty and then right back in).

Years pass.

It's hard to remember why you ever worried so much when he was a puppy. He would never think of running out the door left open while you bring in the packages from the car. It would be beneath his dignity to jump out the window of the car while you run into the convenience store. And when you take him for those wonderful, long walks at dawn, it only takes one whistle to send him racing back to you in a burst of speed when the walk becomes too close to the highway. He still gets in the garbage, but nobody is perfect

This is the time the disease has waited for so patiently. Sometimes it only has to wait a year or two, but often it takes much longer. He spies the neighborhood dog across the street and suddenly forgets everything he ever knew about not slipping outdoors, jumping out windows or coming when called due to traffic. Perhaps it was only a paper fluttering in the breeze, or even just the sheer joy of running.

Stopped in an instant. Stilled forever, your heart is broken at the sight of his still body.

The disease is trust. The final outcome--hit by a car.

Every morning for seven years my dog bounced around off lead exploring.

Every morning for seven years he came back when he was called.

He was perfectly obedient, perfectly trustworthy.

He died fourteen hours after being hit by a car.

Please do not risk your friend and your heart.

Save the trust for things that don't matter.

Please read this every year on your puppy's birthday, lest we forget.
